

EFFECTIVENESS RESEARCH INTO CAM

There are more research studies into Complementary and Alternative Medicine (CAM) than is commonly recognised.

Pubmed, the search engine accessing primarily the MEDLINE database of references and abstracts on life sciences and biomedical topics at the US National Library of Medicine, lists over 18,000 randomised controlled trials in Complementary Medicine.

The Cochrane Collaboration, an international effort to develop an evidence base for a wide variety of medical therapies, both biomedical (conventional) and CAM, lists more than 7,000 randomised trials for various CAM therapies in its electronic library. Furthermore, a number of Cochrane Collaboration systematic reviews of this worldwide research literature have identified the potential benefits of CAM and related approaches and products for a number of chronic conditions.

The National Center for Complementary and Integrative Health (NCCIH) at the National Institutes of Health (NIH) funds and conducts research to help answer important scientific and public health questions about complementary health approaches. NCCIH works to determine what is promising, what helps and possible mechanisms, what doesn't work, and what is safe. www.nccih.nih.gov/research

CAM-Cancer is an open-access, non-profit web resource providing health professionals with evidence-based information about CAM for cancer. www.cam-cancer.org/The-Summaries
